1　長文読解（エッセイ）（配点 70点）

以下の英文は，旅行記を書いているある作家のエッセイである。英文を読んで，後に続く設問に日本語で解答しなさい。（＊印の語には，英文の末尾に意味を示してある。）

The last time I was truly lost was in a small hill town I had never visited before. My phone battery had died, the streets curved in ways that made no sense, and every corner seemed to lead back to the same fountain. For about an hour I felt foolish and slightly anxious. Then something changed. I stopped trying to escape the maze and began to look at it. I noticed a bakery where an old man was pulling loaves from a wood-fired oven, a staircase painted in faded blue, and a courtyard where two women were arguing cheerfully about a football match. (1)When I finally found my hotel, I realised that I remembered that afternoon more clearly than any of the famous sights I had planned to see. Even the walk back to my hotel taught me something: I could now draw a rough map of the town from memory, with the fountain at its centre and the bakery two turns to the left.

Most of us now carry devices that make getting lost almost impossible. A blue dot tells us where we are, a line tells us where to go, and a calm voice warns us before every turn. This is, of course, enormously useful. Nobody wants to miss a train or wander into a dangerous area at night. Yet I have begun to wonder what we lose when we never have to find our own way. (2)Following instructions differs from understanding a place, just as copying an answer differs from solving a problem.

Some researchers who study memory and navigation＊ have suggested that people who rely heavily on step-by-step directions form a weaker picture of their surroundings than people who use maps or landmarks. When we are told exactly where to turn, our attention stays on the screen rather than on the streets. We arrive at our destination, but we could not explain how we got there, and we would struggle to find the way again without help. A route that we have worked out for ourselves, by contrast, tends to stay with us. Mistakes help too: the wrong turn we took last week becomes a landmark we recognise this week.

There is also an emotional side to losing our way. Being lost forces us to talk to strangers, to admit that we need help, and to trust people we have never met. In my experience, these small acts of dependence often turn into the warmest moments of a journey. A shopkeeper draws a map on the back of a receipt; a schoolboy walks me three streets out of his way and refuses any thanks. (3)Such encounters rarely happen when a machine has already answered every question before we think to ask it.

I do not mean that we should throw our phones into the nearest river. When I travel for work, with meetings to attend and trains to catch, I follow the blue dot as faithfully as anyone.

On a free afternoon, though, I sometimes put the phone in my bag, choose a direction and simply walk. I carry a paper map in case I need it, and I usually do. (4)What I have learned is that a little uncertainty, chosen freely and in safe circumstances, can make an ordinary place feel new. The streets do not change, but the way we see them does.

navigation　道を見つけて進むこと

設問 1　下線部(1)のように筆者がその午後をよく覚えているのはなぜか。道に迷っている途中で筆者の態度がどう変わったかにも触れて，日本語で説明しなさい。

設問 2　下線部(2)を和訳しなさい。

設問 3　下線部(3)の Such encounters とはどのような出会いか。段落④の例を一つ挙げて，80字以内で説明しなさい。

設問 4　下線部(4)を和訳しなさい。また，筆者が携帯電話を使わずに歩くのはどのようなときか，段落⑤の内容に即して述べなさい。

2　長文読解（体験談）（配点 70点）

次の英文は，ある女性が子どものころの体験を振り返って書いた文章である。英文を読んで，後に続く設問に日本語で解答しなさい。（＊印の語には，英文の末尾に意味を示してある。）

When I was twelve, I wanted a bicycle more than anything in the world. Not just any bicycle, but a green one with silver handlebars that stood in the window of the hardware shop on our high street. My parents told me kindly but firmly that it was too expensive. (1)If I really wanted it, my father said, I would have to earn at least half of the money myself.

So I took a job delivering newspapers. Every morning at six, before school, I walked a route of forty-two houses with a heavy canvas bag over my shoulder. In winter it was still dark, and my fingers were often so cold that I could hardly fold the papers. I kept a notebook in which I recorded every coin I earned, and each Saturday I counted my savings and worked out how many weeks remained.

The last house on my route belonged to Mr Brannock, a retired carpenter who lived alone. He was always awake when I arrived, and he always opened the door before I could push the paper through the letterbox. At first this annoyed me, because it meant I had to stop and say good morning when all I wanted was to go home and get warm. (2)Then one icy morning he handed me a mug of hot chocolate and told me to drink it on his step before I went any further.

After that, the hot chocolate became a habit, and so did our conversations. He told me about the chairs and tables he had made, and about a cabinet* he had built for his wife that took him a whole winter. When I told him about the bicycle, he asked to see my notebook. He studied it carefully for several minutes and then said something I did not understand until years later: (3)“The bicycle will be nice. But the notebook is worth more.”

In March, two weeks before I reached my goal, Mr Brannock did not open the door. The paper from the day before was still lying on the mat. I knocked, then ran to the neighbour’s house, and she called an ambulance. He had fallen in the kitchen the previous evening and had been unable to get up. (4)The doctors said that if he had been left on the floor for another day, he might not have survived. For a week, I delivered his paper to an empty house.

When he came home, he asked me to come inside. On the table was a small wooden box with my initials carved on the lid. “For your coins,” he said. “Every serious saver needs a proper bank.” I bought the green bicycle in late April, and I rode it for six years. (5)I no longer have the bicycle, but the box sits on my desk as I write this.

I have often thought about what he meant. I think he was trying to tell me that the bicycle was only the reward; the real prize was what I had become by working for it. I had learned to get up when I would rather have stayed in bed, to keep records, and to wait. (6)I had also learned, almost by accident, that the people we see every day without really noticing them may be the ones who matter most.

cabinet　飾り棚

設問 1　下線部(1)を和訳しなさい。

設問 2　段落②から，冬の新聞配達がどのようにつらかったかがわかる記述を二つ挙げ，日本語で書きなさい。

設問 3　ブラノックさんが毎朝ドアを開けて待っていることを，筆者が最初いやだと感じたのはなぜか。日本語で述べなさい。

設問 4　下線部(2)を和訳しなさい。

設問 5　下線部(3)でブラノックさんが伝えようとしたことを，筆者は後にどのように理解したか。段落⑦に書かれていることをもとに説明しなさい。

設問 6　下線部(4)を和訳しなさい。

設問 7　3月のある朝，筆者がブラノックさんの異変に気づいたきっかけと，そのあと筆者がとった行動を，日本語で説明しなさい。

設問 8　下線部(5)の the box とは何か。誰が，何のために作ったものかがわかるように日本語で説明しなさい。

設問 9　下線部(6)を，almost by accident の意味がわかるように和訳しなさい。

3　英作文（調査結果の読み取り）（配点 60点）

下の英文の指示と表をもとに，英語で答えなさい。

設問 1　表と英文の指示を読み，題をつけて書きなさい。

A fictional city asked 1,200 residents aged 16 to 80 which of eight activities they would most like to spend more time on if they had two extra free hours a week.

Look at the results below. Give your essay a title, explain the main findings, and suggest a likely reason why younger and older residents answered differently.

Write between 180 and 220 English words. Using every number in the table is optional.

Larkhaven City survey: “If you had two extra free hours a week, what would you most like to do?” (%, 400 residents in each age group)

Activity	Aged 16–29	Aged 30–59	Aged 60–80
Hobbies such as music or art	22	12	10
Travel and day trips	18	11	12
Learning a new skill	16	6	6
Sleeping or resting	15	24	4
Exercise or sport	12	14	15
Spending time with family	7	21	20
Reading	6	8	16
Volunteering in the community	4	4	17
